

Early Years are Learning Years

Helping children learn about reading

Question: Why read a book to a baby? Why sing to a toddler?

Answer: Because reading and singing help children learn.
When you read and sing, children feel warm and safe.
Reading and singing brings your children closer to you.

Here are tips to help your children learn:

Babies

-  Talk or sing to baby in the bath or at lunchtime.
-  Give baby cardboard or cloth books with pictures. Point out words.

Toddlers

-  Read stories before bed. If you do not read well, tell a story.
-  Let toddlers "write" shopping lists with you.
-  Point out words on signs at the park or when walking.

Preschoolers

-  Give your child things to "play" at writing and reading—checks or menus.
-  Play picture-card games with your child.

School-aged children

-  Keep reading with your child or telling her stories, especially at bedtime, even if she has already learned to read.
-  Listen to her stories and jokes. Ask her to write them down for you to read.

Adapted by California WIC from National Association for the Education of Young Children. Copyright/Permission: Copyright © 1997 National Association for the Education of Young Children. Reproduction of this material is freely granted, provided credit is given to the National Association for the Education of Young Children